DEFENDING HOMEOWNERS RIGHTS EXTENDS TO SUPPORT OF KPCC PUBLIC RADIO IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Attorney Clayton Anderson sees a connection between defending the rights of homeowners in construction defect cases and his support of KPCC Radio, a National Public Radio station that covers Southern California from its station in Los Angeles.

Anderson, senior partner in the law firm of Anderson & Kriger which has six offices throughout the state, contends the station programs and values reflect the quality of life in this region.

“Likewise, helping homeowners receive compensation for the damage and repair of their homes caused by construction defects contributes to the quality of life of the individual homeowner and his family,” observes Anderson. “It’s all about living up to your potential and receiving satisfaction through the system for grievances. Many homebuilders and developers tended to do less than their best as homes, apartments and condominiums spread throughout the Southland over the past 20 years or more. Homeowners need to realize they don’t have to put up with such issues as soil subsidence, cracked patios and walls, poor drainage, leaky windows, mold and so forth.

“These are not some sort of sunshine tax, these are problems that can be corrected.”

Anderson believes KPCC is a beacon for communicating such values as family, community, quality education, equal opportunity, fairness and justice, and other positive attributes of living in Southern California.

Anderson is a member of Southern California Public Radio’s President’s Circle. In the Los Angeles area, Anderson & Kriger is located at 1231 E. Dyer Road, Suite 250, in Santa Ana. Call 714-424-5100 for information.
